THE LEGISLATURE.

WEDNESDAY, February 5. Senate.—In the Senate this morning the order of receiving reports from Committees was interrupted by the consideration of tha bill prepared by the Joint Select Committee of the two Houses, proposing to divide the State into 36 judicial circuits, to abolish the Court of Common Pleas, transferring its business to the Circuit Court, and providing for the election of Judges and Prosecuting Attorneys on the second Tuesday of October, 1873, to take the place of those holding their office by appointment of the Governor. Two speeches were made on both sides—Messrs. Gooding and Brown in favor of the proposed change of the judicial system, and Messrs. O'Brien and Boone in opposition—when the committee rose, reported progress, and asked and obtained leave to sit again at two o'clock this atternoon. SENATE. - In the Senate this morning the House.—The House of Representatives passed the local option temperance bill—the bill matured by the Committee on Temperance, based on the Ohio and Illinois law, providing that the vendor shall have a majority peution before obtaining a permit, &c. The bill to provide for the service of summons and executions issued by Justices of the Peace, where the defendant resides in an adjoining county, extending the authority of the Justice as to summons, &c., which the Court has to subpons, was also finally passed by the House. Also the bill to amend sec. 65 of the practice act so as to require the Court to correct the mis-description of the property as in case of mis-description in mortgages, affirming the substance of one Supreme Court decision and overraling another, was finally passed by the House of Representatives.

The Greeley Will, etc. NEW YOEK, February 5.—The recent rise in Erie has given currency to all sorts of rumors in Wall street regarding the generally conceded fact that Gould is engaged in bulling, and acting in concert with his brokers on the other side. It is said large numbers of prominent operators here and in Europe are short, and that some of them were formerly connected with the Erie management; that the latter, to save themselves from loss, are about to press charges against the officers who engineered the so-called restitution, to compel them to disclose certain matters of detail never yet published, but which have been carefully suppressed to further this stock-jobbing operation, and lull stock-holders into fancied security.

There is nothing in his character or career which mars the force of his beneficent influence. No young man can ponder the story of his life without profit. He is one of the few public men of our age who may be safely held up to the imitation of the young. It is therefore to the people at large that the committee confidently appeal. It is their privilege and duty to honor worthily the man who best represented the brain and the conscience of the masses.

This is in no sense a partisan enterprise. The Committee is composed of members of all parties, equally proud to do honor to one whose laborious life was passed in devotion to the general welfare.

The rich can not better show their appreciation of the lessons of industry and order which he taught, and the poor, in giving what slight sums they can afford, will honor their own estate and aspirations. It is not doubted that every editor in the country will be willing to forward the work, either by an editorial indorsement or by receiving and forwarding such sums as may be raised in his locality. There is not a village in the land but contains some map who has profited by Mr. Greeley's teachings. We hope there is not one where an effort will not be made to contribute to this expression of the national gratitude.

Edwin Booth's Brutus. [N. Y. Letter to St. Globe.]

Payne's Brutus has never had such a blendid illustrator as Edwin Booth. It is Payne's Brutus has never had such a splendid illustrator as Edwin Booth. It is certainly one of the very best impersonations in his wide reperioire. Seeing it, an evening or two since, I was once more convinced that he is, by all odds, the greatest dramatic artist of his time. His Brutus is well-nigh faultless—so vivid, real, terrible, in its intensity as to be positively painful to witness. No man on the stage was ever more completely and profauntly an actor. He seems inspired and permeated with the character. His form, his face, his manners, his hlood, his universal being, are full of, and reflect, it. The individual is altogether lost in the artist. One never thinks of Booth in witnessing Brutus; but one is involuntarily carried back to the day of ancient home, to the era of its kings, to the flares civil foes who expelled and grushed the libidinous Tarquin. Every muscle, every feature, every fibre of Edwin Booth's nature responds to his rapt spirit. He is suffused with passion, surcharged with electric force. He possesses his audience, who start and throb and thrill under his marvelous magnetism. I consider myself a blase theater-goer, but I confess I am unable to witness Booth's Brutus a without feeling something.

[From a Washington Dispatch.]
Mr. Colfax, through his attorney, has noticed the committee that he does not wish to Sunday last a colored man named Sawyers entered Bruner's grocery store on North Mississippi, and called for bread. Bruner wanted to shut up, and told Sawyers to go out, and because of the retort, "I'll go whenever I d—n get ready," undertook to use force. Another colored man, Lee Carter, was called upon to assist in the putting out process, which he did by whaling away with a mineral bottle, that caromed on Sawyers's neck and ear and left a palpable mark. Today Carter was fined $11 40 for doing this, and the assailed a like amount for provoke.

Runaway.

The cream colored nags belonging to the United States Express Company ran away on East Washington street this forenoon, creating no little excitement among pedestrians and drivers of small vehicles. Near Pennsylvania the heavy express wagon collided with a light delivery wagon, breaking the springs and rear portion; next' it ran foul of Hurley's dray, upsetting the old horse and dragging him fifty feet or more. Then came a collision with W. H. L. Noble's buggy, which was wreeked. After this the horses

Very poor people also buy it for home consumption, but it has a disastrous effect on health, and the Mark Lane Express consoles itself with the idea that it only reduces the poor rates and lessens the emigration to the United States.

TROUBLE is fast brewing between Russia and England in India. Russia is greedily anxious to seize upon the rich prize of the Indian trade, and is assuming an aggressive attitude which, if persisted in, will lead to war. England will fight for India. She may steer clear of Continental quarrels and arbitrate in American affairs, but when her pocket is touched in India she will fight. John Bull cares a good deal for his honor, but very much more for his money-bags, and if Russia counts on his hitherto peaceable disposition she will be very much mistaken.

SENATOR CALDWELL, of Kansas, is an innocent man to hear him tell it. His election did not cost anything like $60, 000. He paid Carney $15,000, it is true, to withdraw, but he spurned the temptation at first, and only yielded when he found he would have to come down, and hesides Carney would have paid him $30. 000 for his withdrawal. He can't see why such a fuss should be made when he did not expend a dollar except for "legitimate' expenses. Pray, what are "legitimate' expenses? That is a point on which we would like to be enlightened. In the old days it was supposed that a United States Senator was chosen on account of his fitness, and that no money had to be spent for anything. That is the way the business s managed here. No one ever heard of Senator Morton's keeping open parlors with unlimited champagne, cigars and cold turkey. Even during the exciting Cumback controversy, which landed Mr. Pratt into the Senate there were no expenses 'legitimate" or "illegitimate." And there should be none in any State. Indiana may have a bad divorce law, and she may have some mean politicians, but no one can charge that corruption was ever used to elect a U. S. Senator. When money becomes the standard by which the fitness of a Senatorial candidate is measured, when seats can be bought and sold like corn or stocks, the public demoralization is very great. The public conscience must be aroused to these enormities, and the mere admission of Caldwell that he paid Carney $15,000 to withdraw should be sufficient ground for his expulsion.

The Contract System for Printing. We do not think any better plan for doing the State printing can be adopted than the contract system. This, if faithfully carried out, assures economy and honesty in the work, and prevents the making of special or constructive bills for services not rendered. The only object tion ever made to it is that stealing can be done under it. That is so. But the same objection will apply to any system and the contract plan is better than any other if only for the reason that it puts the printing on a business basis, and makes it no longer a rich meal for a starying partisan or a delicacy for an over-fed and pampered organ fattening at the expense of the people. The experience of other States is convincing on this point. We have several times given the official figures of the cost of the public printing in Ohio as compared with its cost here. In that State, where the printing is at least a third greater than in Indiana, it costs less than fifty thousand dollars per annum. This is including every expenditure. In Indiana the average cost is sixty-five thousand dollars. Surely there should be no such difference, and our printing ought not to cost over thirty-five thousand dollars on the most liberal estimate. A contract system, guarded with a few such provisions as the following. should certainly protect the people from

I. There should be a Board of Printing, composed, say, of the Auditor, Treasurer and Secretary of State, and during the legislative sessions the chairmen of the Printing Committees might be added.

II. There should be a Supervisor of Printing selected by the Board and approved by the Governor, who should be a practical, experienced printer, and who should give an adequate bond for the performance of his duties. His busine should be to oversee the work, to see that it was done according to contract, the fall number of copies supplied, and the State dealt with honestly throughout.

III. It should be the duty of the Board to divide the work up and establish differ ent classes. The printing of bills and ages for the Legislature might be one; the journals another; the statutes enacted another; the Agricultural report another; the State Geologist's report another; the stationery, letter-heads, warrants, receipts, etc., of the State offices. another, etc. The printing should not be let in bulk or all at one time, but as occamanded. Then the Board should sion de advertise at several points for proposals for a specified class of work at a certain time, and the lowest responsible bidden should have the work, the Board also advertising the bids and their awards as fully as the original proposals.

IV. All acts of the Board to be appr ved by the Governor before being legal. V. After the Supervisor has examined all work and approved it on oath the Board to audit the bill and after the Executive approval to pay it.

VI. The Supervisor and Board of Control to make a full report at each session of the Legislature.

This plan is not too complicated and it involves the concurrence of such a number of men in high station as to make it almost certain that fair work will be done for a fair price. With a Supervisor only there might be bribery. With a Board only there might be negligence or fraud mitted through their ignorance of practical details. And with the supervision of the Governor as a final check both Board and Supervisor would be stimulated to take special pains to have every thing right. Probably some of these suggestions can be amended and perhaps other valuable restrictions can be uggested. Something in this line should be done, and if no one has anything better to propose the experiment of the contract system should be tried. It has suceded in Ohio and there is no reason why it should not succeed here ...

THE KANSAS TRAGEDY.

The Overthrow of Pomery—An Exciting Scene Vividly Described.

eka Correspondence St. Louis Republica There were seven men in that house who There were seven men in that house who knew exactly what was coming when York rose to his question of privilege. They were Ben. Simpson, James C. Horton, Wm. A. Johnson, Geo. A. Crawford, Ben. McDonald, A. M. York and the subscriber. Ross knew it, but he was not there. On every side the emissaries of Pomeroy were as thick as bees on a buckwheat patch, and as busy. They kept up a continual buzz in the lobby, and ran hither and yon about the aisles and desks, negotiating with members who were to be bought, and stiffening up the spinal columns of those who had been paid far. After a moon to clear the lobbies and galleries had een voted down. Mr. Guerin, of Fort Scott, been voted down. Mr. Guerin, of Fort Scott, rose and put in nomination Hon. John James Ingalls, prefacing it with a remarkably pertinent and telling little speech.

"Who in h—I is Ingalls?" contemptuously proceeded out of a Pomeroyal mouth in my immediate vicinity.

It occurred to me that the proprietor of that mouth would be enlightened upon that point directly.

the offering of contrition he would lay at the feet of his great and glorious master, the vice-roy of Kansas under the empire. When his hand went down into his breast pocket and girl for fear he wouldn't marry her, and gomery. He is a medium-sized, alender man, with a thin pale face; large, full, hazel eyes; a high forehead; small, pointed chin; and thin, clean-cut nose and lips. He is ordinarily a quiet man, not fluent of speech nor impressive in presence, but he wears an air of calm, easy dignity and self-conscious honesty and earnestness of purpose that makes up for his lack of the other physical points of prominence. He is a Missourian, from Shelby county, where he was formerly a law-partner of Representative Shafer, of the last General Assembly. That he possesses an extraordinary degree of cool, desthe last General Assembly. That he possesses an extraordinary degree of cool, desperate nerve can not be questioned, when one estimates the nature of the game he played and apprehends the manner in which he played it. There was just a fine point on which his chances of success or failure balanced. A single false move, a breath of trepidation, or an inch of backing down after he had set the thing agoing, would have given the other side a chance to rally, and then

If the Pomeroy cohorts could ever once rally from the stupefaction of the first blow, then the men who sprung this mine must stand from under. All these chances York had calculated and weighed, and he took them deliberately and desperately.

He walked straight down the aisle and laid the money in front of the Lieutenant Governor, asking that it be counted; then went back to his seat. The Lieutenant Governor said: "Mr. Clerk, please count this money, as requested by the Senator from Montgomery."

when it was counted, Mr. York said:
"Will the Clerk please announce the amount?" "Five thousand dollars in one package, and two thousand dollars in another package," said the clerk.

Talk about a dead silencel There hush that made the air thick. You could hear a feather move through the atmosphere. York's face was as white as the sheet I am writing on, and his eyes shone with a gleam of savagery that was strange and unwonted in their mild hazel depths. Every eye in the house was upon him, as a man watches the turn of a game that carries his last nickel, and every ear was strained to painfulness to catch his first breath of utterance.

THE EXPLOSION.

After a minute of silence, that seemed an age, he began what, under all the circumstances, will go down in history as the most remarkable speech ever made in any deliberative body. It is preserved in short hand, but has not been transcribed, and so I will not pretend to give it, except as to its outlines. It was a detail of his interviews with parancy and the negotiation that resulted

Pomeroy, and the negotiation that resulted in the sale of his vote for the sum which the clerk which had just announced, together with one thousand dollars additional, to be As he proceeded he grew more impassioned and was at times grandly eloquent.
When he had laid the whole transaction before his audience he opened out in a perora-tion that was absolutely irresistible. He saw that the bolt he had sent had told, and he read in the wonder-stricken faces that vere turned to him the legend of revolution It was in the air, endemic, and men drew it into their lungs that swelled with it, through nostrils that it dilated, and it caught in the nervous fibres and became a deleterium. It was a subtle miasm that permeated organisms and set souls ablaze with the fervor of wonder, rage and revenge. The Pomeroy men it had struck numb and dumb. Itssavage men it had struck numb and dumb. Its avage suddenness had transfixed, while its astound-ing relentlessness asphyxiated them. And still, piling Ossa upon Pelion, as if togrind into dust the quivering carcass of the vic-tim whose reeking heart he had torn out and brandished aloft, hot and smoking. York heaped anathema upon curse and curse upon-denunctation.

I have heard of those grand old oratorical earthquakes when genius has shaken despotism and when rhetoric has made thrones quake. This was the only thing of the kind I ever saw. If it was a revolution York embodied it for that moment. For never was despotism so cruel or absolute than Pomerov's in Kensee and never was than Pomerov's in Kensee and never was than the control of the control of the control or absolute than Pomerov's in Kensee and never was than the control of the contro roy's in Kansas, and never was throne deeper rooted and firmer rock-bound than his. But before the tornado-tongued hurricane of York's inspiration it shook and toppled like frost-work. He spoke about fifteen minutes, and into When he finished and sat down, it seemed an age before there was a stir. All that could be heard was a deepening buzz as men recovered from the daze of their wonderment and awe. Then there was one who, to ment and awe. breast against this onrushing Niagara of the revolution that had set in for the people against the money-kings. It was Dan Adams, the man who

"PAID MY CHECKS."

"PAID MY CHECKS,"
and he was still trying to pay them, but he couldn't reach the pile that York has passed in. He tried to get an adjournment, and for a moment it seemed as though the storm might be stayed and the tornado sent howling on its back track. There was a brief, eddying whirlwind of angry discussion; words hot and hard passed thick and fast, and then the hurricane swept ahead again. And this time it took men with it as helpless as a gauze curtain in the Chicago fire. Men who had fed and fattened on Pomeroy's bounty; who owed him for the clothes they wore and for the barber's oil that sleeked their hair, weakened and tured against him, in that weakened and tured against him, in that moment the savagest of his persecutors. Adams alone tried to stand by the man who had given him all he ever had, but he was swept down and trampled on as a drummer-boy before a charge of cuirassiers.

THE TRYING SECOND.

During all this time there was just one second when the balance of right and wrong stood stock still. That was when Adams moved an adjournment. Had that motion prevailed Kansas would still be unredeemed, and the Senatorial cordon of corruption and venal infamy still unbroken. I recall one instance like it. It was when Pickett and venal infamy still unbroken. I recall one instance like it. It was when Pickett and McLaws and Anderson moved up the slope at Gettysburg in the afternoon of the last day, at the head of their ragged rebel heroes. Then the continent held its breath to see whether we should be one nation or two, as those stern battle lines broke under or stood against the iron storm that sleeted from eighteen cannon full in their brave gray bosoms. Kansas held its breath when the Lieutenant Governor called the vote on adjournment. It breathed again when the thundered "No!" from ninety-odd throats annihilated the feeble "Aye" that had squeaked from thirty, and with it shattered forever the political existence of Senator Pomeroy. After that the fight was a rout and the defeat a holocaust. A record of the expressions of the victors, as Ingalls's vote rose up among the eighties and nineties, would be a curious scrap of history. I stood near Beh. Simpson, and as he tallied ninety on the roll he had in his hand he stooped and said: "B—, this thing will do pretty well. God has taken Horace Greeley's advice and is coming West, and the first sinner he has smashed is Sam Pomeroy; d—n the old reprobate."

"I reckon old Pom will need a d—d sight"

pire brood of tax-suckers, and they all sank with Pomeroy, utterly impotent to save themselves or him. It is an inevitable slaughter of the whole Pomeroy gang; for the Senator-elect, with a united Congres-sional delegation at his back, will make a sweep so clean in the patronage of the State that there will not be so much as a tuft of hair or a blood-stain to show where the slaughter began or ended. And the melancholy realization of this tact wrote itself on the faces of these unfortunates in an utter dejection and dismay that would have been pitiful had not pity been smothered in the

After awhile, the storm was over. When the Lieutenant Governor announced that Ingalls had received one hundred and fifteen galls had received one hundred and fifteen votes, a clear majority of nearly one hundred, and the joint convention was dissolved, the rush for the street was a tumult. You can form some idea of the terrible fascination there had been about these wonderful proceedings when you know that for three hours after the blow was struck Pomeroy never heard of it, for he was in his room at the hoheard of it, for he was in his room at the hotel, and not even his nearest friend could get away long enough to carry the news to him.

I saw him within an hour after he had learned the particulars of his overthrew. He sat then as imperturable as when he had counted up his eighty votes the day before. When they told him of his Waterloo, not a muscle of his face had moved, not an emotion had lit or dimmed his eye. I thought at first that it was a stolid nerve or pluck for which I had never given him credit, that had held him up. But two hours afterward, when he had broken down utterly, when his room looked like a funeral chamber and the few of his retainers who stood by him in his extremity wore the faces of mourners, and when the trace of tears was on his own, cheeks, then I knew that it was not nerve. I think it took the dagger two hours to penetrate his rugget cuticle, but when it struck the quick he collapsed all at one. tel, and not even his nearest friend could get

THE MAJESTY OF THE LAW. It was a strange sight to see a deputy sheriff keeping watch and ward over a United States Senator, upon whom a key had been thined from the outside of the door. Senator Pomeroy was under arrest on a charge of felony whereof the tenderest explation known to the strategy are recovery. n the penitentiary. The law, the making whereof he had travestied so long and so impudently, and of which the breaking he had done so often and so defiantly, bad got its grip on him at last, and justice had begun to taste her vengeance now.

There was a pathos about this phase of the grotesque drama that could not be resisted.

Neither can it be depicted. This thing had come upon him as if a mountain had top-plen over and buried him in the middle of the valley. The hand of retribution had reached to the pinnacle of his hope, torn him ruthlessly from it, and cast him remorselessly down into the deepest pit that could be dug.

As realization after realization crowded upon him, he went from dejection into deupon him, he went from dejection into despendency, from despendency into desperation, and from desperation into brain fever and delirium. In his incoherency he raved of betrayal and of misfortune. He bemoaned his fate and called for help. Once he said his wife would never live with him any more. Then he would talk about Senate bills and points of order, and then relarse into an unquiet shupor from which he ate bills and points of order, and then re-lapse into an unquiet stupor, from which he would suddenly rouse with a new vagary in his wrecked brain.

Then about 11 o'clock he became rational

A Fearful Story of Poverty.

A seamstress was arrested the other day, in Brooklyn, for pawning clothing which she had taken home to sew, and upon her examination the following evidence was elicited: She asserted that, she was emyloyed by a Miss Phillips, of this city, who paid her seventeen cents for making four pairs of trousers, fifty cents for making twelve pairs of drawers, and twenty-five cents for making six shirts. Because she did not finish the trousers as soon as she had agreed to, Miss Phillips refused to pay her, and she thereupon pawned them to keep her family from starying. Here is a case which ought to interest those women who are continually crying out against the tyranny of men. It was not a man who exacted from this poor seamstress such quantities of work at such a preposterous price. It was a woman who refused to pay her the wrethed with the seams of the seam wish to state a plan to the Republicans, hich I have heard avanced by many men of candidates for delegates. Have the names of these men enrolled by the secretary, and written on slips of paper and deposited in a box or something else more convenient. After the names have all been deposited. Let the chairman of the meeting, or some other reliable person, draw from the box ten slips of paper, and after reading the names thereon, manify to man makes countless thousands mourn."

reliable person, draw from the box ten slips of paper, and after reading the names thereon, pass them to the Secretary for enrollment and comparison with his list. The persons so chosen shall constitute the delegation from each ward.

This plan, I think, is worthy the consideration of all, and if carried out, would remedy many of the evils connected with the present mode. At present, the politicians in each ward decide upon a number of persons who favor their candidates and make it a point to have them chosen as delegates. A packed convention favoring some one person is generally the result. By the method proposed the delegates to the convention would not be known until elected, and would perhaps be the most honest and efficient men in the ward. At least they would not be a packed convention, with instructions to vote for some particular person, and perhaps under obligations to do so. Instead of that, it would be a convention of honest men, who would undoubtedly nominate for our city officers the best candidates in the field. The trickery and dishonesty necessary to obtain the nomination for any office in the city, is such that honest men will not, as a general rule compete for the nomination, and the such that honest men will not, as a general rule, compete for the nomination, and the result is that our city officers are not always the best that could be obtained.

For these reasons, Mr. Editor, do I wish you to present again a plan which would result, if carried out, in the nomination of honest and competent men for the city officers. G. S. L.

To the Editor of The Evening News: A lot of little children were kept at home for bad coughs and colds the last of last week, and doctored with vinegar stews and hot baths. They barely escaped the lung fever. This (Monday) morning, wrapped up as comfortable as could be, they started for school, and to our horror were sent back through the rain for such a pitiful thing as an excuse, though the teacher was told some of their mothers were not able to write. The children were not only ordered to go, rain or no rain, but they had then to find Professor Shortridge, who is in every place but where he ought to be. Now I want to know if our taxes are made any less while our children are spending time hunting Professor Shortridge? This happened in the tenth district, where they have a very inferior teacher.

The Aimee Troupe closed last night with "La Cent Vierges," to a large but not crowded audience. Neither of the operas presented gave the satisfaction which "La Grande Duchesse" and "La Perichole" afforded, though the company, saving the absence of Noe, was better than before, in talent, voice and volume. Aimee herself sang under the great disadvantage of a severe cold, but nothing could quench the sparkle of her acting.

The remainder of the company did more than well, and the management probably made a good thing of the short season. But a little Opera Bouffe goes a good ways.

Last evening the friends and acquaintnces attending Bradshaw's musical soiree were gratified with a program, embracing several gems of vocal and instrumental art, splendidly executed. 'Carnival de Venice," original with Robert, and in response, "Ella's Eyes." The flute fantasia was brilliant in execution, and, in the expressive language of a lady near by, "perfectly sweet." Later in the evening Robert gave a piano solo, partly original which brought out the full power of the nagnificent Weber Grand.

The vocal part fell upon Prof. Black, Ora Pearson, Mrs. U. J. Hammond and Mrs. Hattie Lynn. The solo "Heart Bow'd Down," by the Professor, was, to use his own comment. "a little short-waisted," for which a had cold and defective light was in a great measure responsible. Mrs. Lynn was heartily encored in the solo, "I Think of Thee," but persistently refused to respond. Mrs. Hammond captivated by the exceeding beauty of the solo "Fountain of Pearls," and after persisted applause responded with "I Heard a Wee Bird Singing"-a perfect gem of vocal art faultlessly rendered. "Maids of Merry England," solo by Prof. Pearson, was hardly a choice selection, as it failed in giving full scope to that gentleman's capabilities. Afterwards, in the duett with Mrs. Hammond ("A Night in Venice,") he showed to better advantage. Taken collectively, the instrumental and vocal parts of the program were full of decidedly cultivated merit, and the whole was sufficient to gratify a most fastidious taste. This entertainment was given in the new hall recently fitted up by Messrs. Bradshaw & Son, over their East Washington street music store, and these gentlemen deserve highest number entertained at any meal was abundant reward for their enterprise and liberality in providing such a rich musical feast as that of last evening.

State Board of Agriculture.

President Sutherland called the Board to order at 9 o'clock this morning.
